

Corcetti Health and Wellness Centre — Advanced Treatment & Nutritional Therapy

Dr. Robert Corcetti has understood how pain can change your life after suffering a severe trauma during a high-school pole-vaulting accident. The chiropractor who alleviated his pain then set him on a path to become the doctor he is today, and the training he's acquired along the way has enabled him to specialize in patients who suffer from the most severe problems.

"In chiropractic college, my rugby coach was my professor and he taught me the technique that I use today," Dr. Corcetti said. "Because he was my coach, I was able to intern in his clinic at a very early age in my career. He took me to seminars that specialized in the biomechanics of the spine, so I learned how to restore spinal function and correct postural imbalances. Little did I know that would propel me to where I am today. I am very grateful to have had those doctors in my life at that time."

As time went on, Dr. Corcetti's approach to helping others get relief from pain stemmed from a combination of his training and his exposure to a non-invasive chiropractic technique called Neurological Relief Center Technique (NRCT). As a result, his patient caseload looked more like an emergency room than that of a chiropractor. NRCT is a great non-invasive treatment for patients suffering from concussions, post-surgical pain, head and neck injuries and more. Patients receive more benefits and more functional improvements from the NRCT treatment approach. The result is a return to a normal lifestyle, free from pain, for many who had given up hope that they would ever live a normal life again.

Dr. Corcetti's approach to others' health situations also stems from a stroke he experienced in 2012, which left him with no sense of balance. He couldn't walk and, because of head and neck pressure, he couldn't practice. His wife took him to a colleague, who also practiced NRCT, for treatments. He also conferred with another colleague, who practiced wellness – as Dr. Corcetti did – with all-natural supplements. Together, they chose a program that helped repair Dr. Corcetti's body and regain the strength he lost.

Dr. Corcetti soon re-entered his practice with a renewed passion to share his recovery and what treatments he utilized to accomplish a wellness mission for himself.

"I realized that I was to have this experience so I would get the message out to others," he said. "There is hope for all patients. You just need to be willing to look into alternative medical approaches medicine to find answers for the root of the problem, not just treat symptoms. That's something I can speak of from my heart and my own experience."

It took him several years to fully recover from his stroke, but after four months, he entered the clinic on a part-time basis. He remains on the cutting edge of his profession in Chiropractic and Integrated Nutritional Medicine by attending seminars and trainings, and applying his knowledge to young and old alike for the life-changing results they expect and receive.
